

CDBG PROCESS

CDBG requires a detailed application that includes a description of the project, leveraged funds, population served, etc., and supporting documentation.

City Council reviews recommendations made by the evaluating committee and makes the final decisions about funding awards.

After City Council approves the projects, the City submits an Annual Action Plan to HUD for review and approval.

Before funding can be allocated for each Subrecipient, the City has to complete environmental review for each project to determine impact it has on the environment. Grant recipients are responsible for providing documentation necessary for environmental review completion.

To receive funds, Subrecipients must have a contract with the City that specifies conditions of the grant funding. Subrecipients cannot request funding without an executed contract.

Depending on the type of the project, grant recipients have to comply with multiple federal, state and local regulations.

Labor Standards Regulations

Procurement Rules

Projects funded with CDBG funds are subject to reporting requirements throughout the project cycle. Reports are accompanied by documents which allow the City to verify eligibility of the funded activities.

The City has a responsibility to monitor its recipients. Monitoring visits are scheduled to track project progress and to address any concerns related to the grant administration.

After a project is completed, all reports submitted, and all funds distributed the project funded by specific Fiscal Year can be closed. Records of the project have to be maintained by the City and the Subrecipient for at least 4 years after the program has been officially closed.
